

Brand Book

Document edition, for one pagers, decks and print

Bluefyn

Brand Guidelines v1.0

Introduction

Source: the Brand Guide page of the Bluefyn Figma file, v1.0, with the master logo artwork from Logo 10-8 Final.

This book condenses the Bluefyn brand guide into what a document needs: the logo, the colors, the two typefaces, the graphic system and the rules for laying out a page.

Accountability for money movement. Bluefyn checks every fee you pay and every invoice you send against your contracts.

The brand works the way the product does. Every finding shows its work: the transaction, the contract term and the math behind it. So we show real records, plain checks and clear verdicts. Nothing asks to be taken on faith.

Logo

The logo has two parts: the symbol and the wordmark. The symbol is four fins set as a B. The wordmark is our name, drawn once and used the same way everywhere.

Use the master files. Never retype the wordmark, redraw the symbol or set the two parts by eye.

Ink #1C1919 on paper, white on night, white on Bluefyn blue. One color, always from the palette.

Clear space: x, the cap height of the B, on every side of the logo. The symbol alone keeps a quarter of its height.

Smallest logo: x = 10 px, 15 px tall. Below that, use the symbol.

In print the logo sits small. White on navy, centered over the records or in the corner next to the headline.

Smallest symbol: 16 px. At 24 px and below, use the small-size cut.

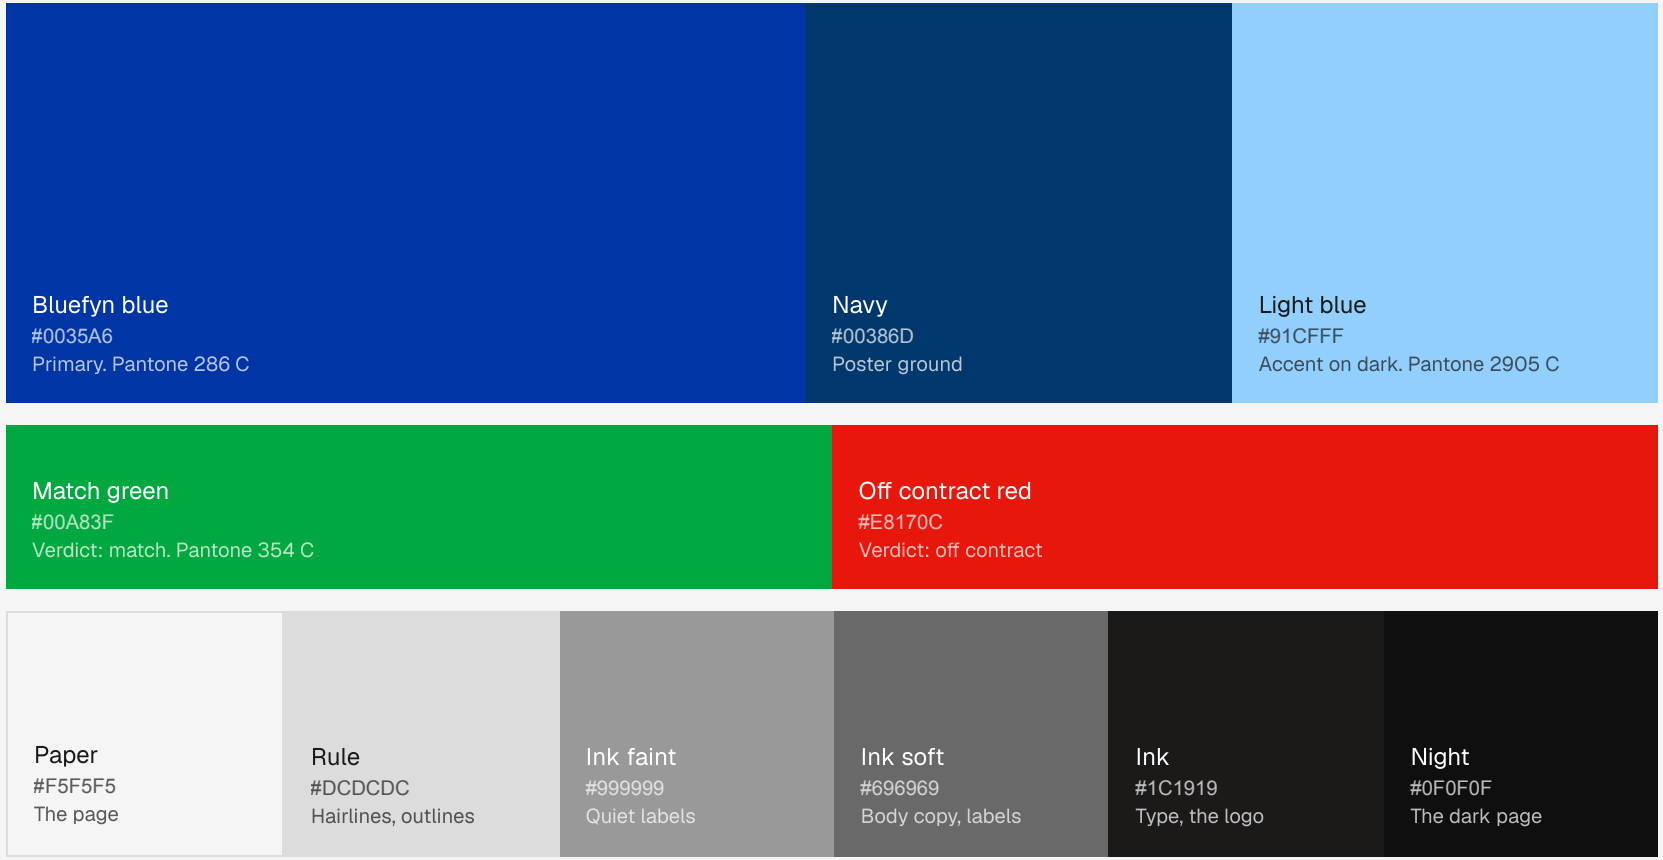

Do not stretch, recolor or outline it. No shadows, glows or gradients, and never on a busy image.

Color

The palette is mostly black and white, with a brand blue and two signal colors.

Neutrals do most of the work. Blue is the accent: focus, the CHECKING state and the one line that matters most. Light blue takes its place on dark grounds. Navy is the ground of posters and covers.

Green and red are verdicts, not decoration. Green means MATCH, red means OFF CONTRACT, and every mark also says it in words.

On night, ink turns #EBEBEB. Pantone references are starting points for print. Confirm each with drawdowns.

Typography

Two typefaces, two jobs. Geist carries the words. Arial carries the records.

Headlines and text both use Geist at weight 400, so size and tracking carry the hierarchy. Headlines run tight, text keeps normal tracking.

Arial sets data: amounts, IDs and verdicts. It runs in capitals and figures, with tabular numbers and no kerning, so every digit keeps its column.

Geist

Headlines and text

CHARGED 42.00 CONTRACT 35.00

0123456789

Data and records, in capitals and figures

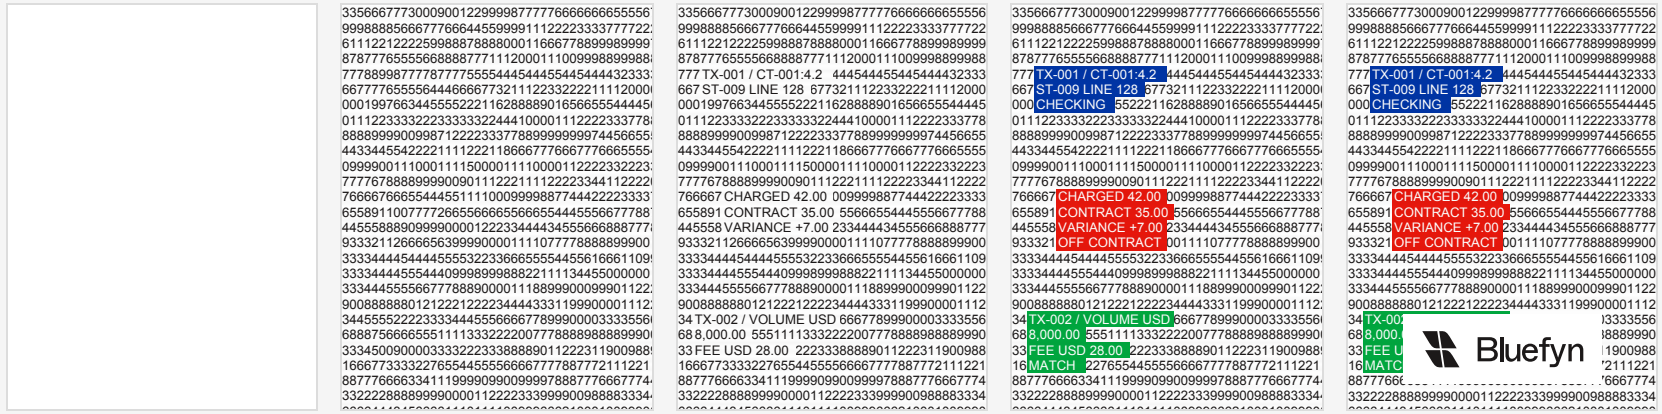

Role	Site	Print	Line height, tracking
Page title	40 px	27 pt	0.96 to 1.04, -0.03em to -0.04em
Section heading and figures	28 px	16 to 19 pt	1.1, -0.03em
Card heading	17 px	12.6 pt	1.15 to 1.5, -0.015em to 0
Closing statements	18 px	11 pt	1.3 to 1.36, -0.014em
Body	15 px	8.8 to 9.3 pt	1.3 to 1.46, 0
Labels	12 px	7.8 pt	1.2 to 1.5, 0, sentence case, ink soft
MARKS	11 px	6.1 pt	Arial capitals, white on the verdict color

The Figma guide sets words in Inter. This edition sets them in Geist. Site sizes are the guide's. Print sizes are the ones the one pager uses on a US Letter page.

Graphic system

Every Bluefyn visual is built the same way, in five layers: paper, the digit field, the records, the marks that check them and the wordmark.

Built in this order, it reads as one check. Layers can be left out, but never reordered.

01 Paper — 02 Digit field — 03 Records — 04 Marks — 05 Wordmark

CHECKING

Blue, while the scan crosses the record.

MATCH

Green, when the charge agrees with the contract.

OFF CONTRACT

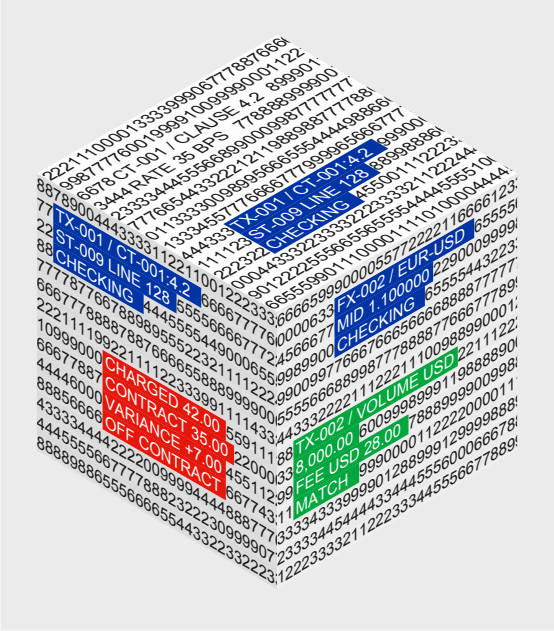

Red, when it does not. A color never appears without its word.

Imagery

We have no photography. Our imagery is the product made visible: the tower of records, the posters and the diagrams.

Everything is drawn from our own material: Arial records and digits, blue CHECKING marks that resolve to green MATCH or red OFF CONTRACT, light gray cards.

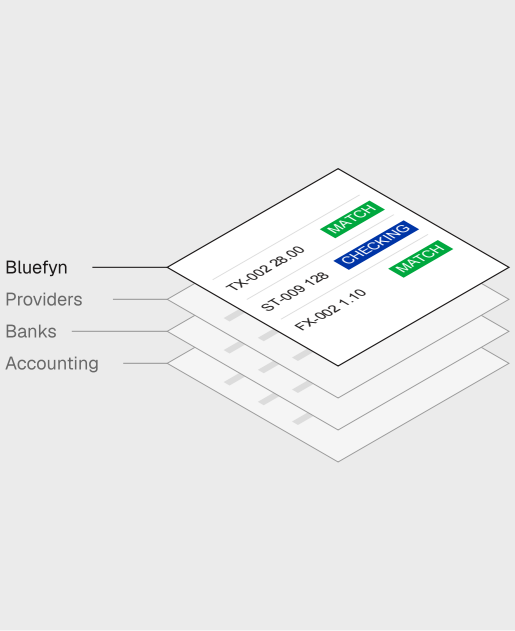

No stock photos and no people. If an image could belong to another company, it does not belong here.

The block of records: one digit field on three equal faces, drawn whole, never stretched or cropped.

The record texture on poster navy. Keep it low so type stays legible on top.

The platform stack: Bluefyn above every tool, reading one record at a time. Every state is labeled in words.

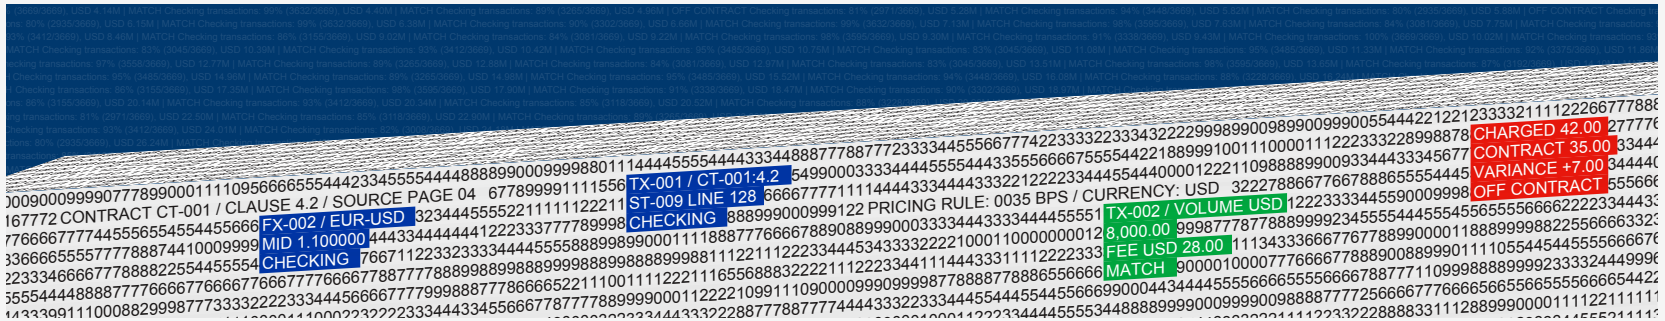

Patterns and textures sit behind content. Light grays, quiet enough that the type in front reads first.

Diagrams stay exact. Plates, hairlines and records in Arial capitals.

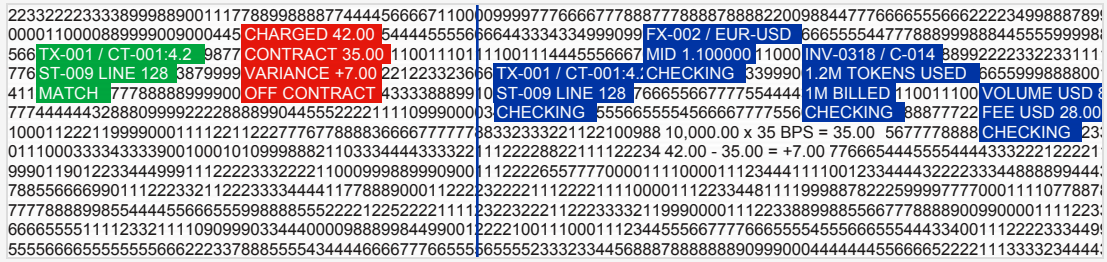

Graphics

The posters, the site and our documents share one set of drawings. Each is made of the same material: digits, records and marks.

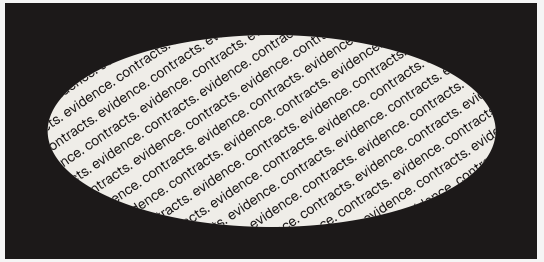

Pick one as the hero of a page and let it run large, off the edge if it wants to. The others stay small or stay out.

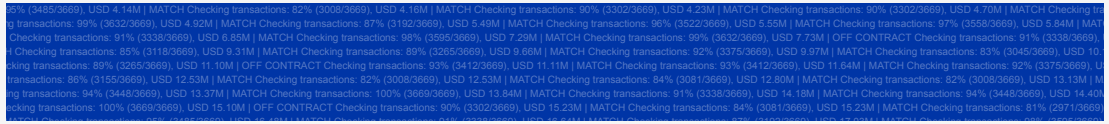

The slab: the poster's block of records, seen from the front and a little above. It rises across the page and bleeds off both sides.

The scan: the check in progress. Verdicts behind the blue line, CHECKING ahead of it.

The ellipses: two words of contract language on a slant, on charcoal.

The stream: the check log, line after line, white on Bluefyn blue or ink on paper.

The same stream run in vertical columns, on night.

Documents

How a one pager, a memo or a deck page is built from the system.

The left column follows the guide. The right column lists what gives a page away as machine made, from the guide's things to avoid and from design review.

Build with

- Paper page, ink type, hairlines in Rule. Square corners.
- The 12-column grid. Every edge sits on it, and blocks share the same few column edges down the page.
- Geist 400 for every word. Size and tracking set the hierarchy, not weight.
- Arial capitals and figures for data. Amounts, IDs, verdicts and marks.
- Labels in sentence case. Small, in ink soft.
- One accent. Bluefyn blue for marks and the line that matters most.
- Navy with the record texture. For poster grounds: the opening of a page or its closing block.
- One hero drawing from the product. The slab, the block, the scan or the ellipses, never a stock image.
- Body copy in ink, 9 pt or larger. Labels in Bluefyn blue on paper, light blue on navy and night.
- The logo small, from the master file. Clear space kept.

Leave out

- Em dashes and en dashes as punctuation. Use a comma, a period or a new line.
- Middle dots and bullets as separators. Use space or a hairline.
- Letterspaced uppercase eyebrows. Capitals belong to records.
- Pill chips and rounded, tinted cards.
- Shadows, glows, gradients and gradient text.
- Rows of identical metric cards. Set figures as a ledger.
- Side-stripe borders, colored bullets, emoji and decorative icons.
- Bold for emphasis and second accent colors.
- Green or red as decoration. They are verdicts.
- Hype words and exclamation points.

Applied: the one pager

The system on one US Letter page, in light and dark. The company and its figures are made up.

The page opens as a poster: navy ground, the record texture and a fine grain, with the logo small in the corner. The figures became a ledger beside the headline, and capitals moved to the marks.

Below the poster everything sits on three columns that share the poster's edges. The line that says what Bluefyn does is set as text under the figures, and the next step closes the page as a full-width navy footer, with the contact in a tag like the one on this book's cover.

Light

Dark

