What your team told us

40+
vendor invoices a week, reviewed by hand

$120K
overbilled by one vendor in a single quarter

Each launch
adds new vendor terms and new customer pricing

Every vendor and customer contract, owned, checked and billed correctly.

Acme Pay is a made-up payments company, used here to show the template. It runs on a stack of processors, banks and identity vendors, each on its own contract. Bluefyn sits as a layer above that stack, so Acme pays vendors correctly, bills customers correctly and sees all of it in one place.

With Bluefyn

Every bill

checked against contract on both sides, continuously

Both sides of Acme's economics

What Acme pays

MONEY OUT

Processors, banks, identity and infrastructure vendors

- Every contract, amendment and renewal owned in one place
- Every vendor invoice checked against its contract
- Monitored continuously, not at month end

Read-only to start. Bluefyn never touches funds

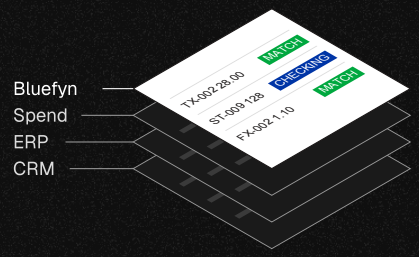

What Acme bills

MONEY IN

Customers on custom, usage-based contracts

- New products turned into billing rules from day one
- Invoices built from usage, revenue shares and netting included
- Unbilled usage caught before invoices go out

A layer above

Works alongside your spend tool, ERP and CRM. Nothing ripped out or replaced.

What our agents flag, before your team has to look

A vendor charges above contract	The amount, the clause and the evidence, ready to dispute
Volume shifts at a vendor or customer	An alert before it moves you across a tier or minimum
A contract nears renewal or expiry	Actual cost against contract, in time to renegotiate
A customer is underbilled	The missing usage, found before the invoice goes out

Who we are

Bluefyn checks every fee you pay and every invoice you send against your contracts, and shows the transaction, the contract term and the math behind each finding.

Why now

Every product Acme launches adds vendor terms on one side and customer pricing on the other. Putting the layer in now keeps both right from day one.

Also included

Treasury forecasting
Account visibility
Reconciliation
AI token management

Next step

A discovery call this week to map your vendor and customer contracts. Then we get to work.

Alex Morgan
Partnerships, Bluefyn alex@example.com